

Interested in a Career in Public Health?

Then Don't Miss

The 2010 U.S. Public Health Service Scientific & Training Symposium

May 24-27, 2010

San Diego Sheraton Hotel and Marina

What:

More than 1,000 U.S. Public Health Service officers and other federal, state and local public health leaders, including the U.S. Surgeon General, will be attending this 3 ½ day conference which offers an array of educational/training sessions, networking opportunities, and an exhibit hall with more than 75 vendors, including recruiters from the U.S. Public Health Service and numerous federal agencies.

Cost:

Registration is free for full-time students (excluding meals). Register today!

Opportunities:

- Learn more about possible careers in public health in the exhibit hall and by networking with other attendees who represent a broad cross-section of careers and jobs
- Meet top officials from the U.S. Public Health Service (USPHS) and other federal agencies. The conference features keynotes by the U.S. Surgeon General; the head of the Health Resources and Services Administration; a top official with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention; and the head of the Health component of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.
- Attend educational sessions that focus on hot topics and emerging trends in public health, as well as case studies examining real world public health applications
- Participate in a student poster session

Learn More:

Visit www.phscofevents.org to learn more about this important opportunity to advance your career. Sign up today!

Don't Miss Out!
Join us in San Diego May 24-27